The candidates for the position of President-Elect, Soumen Ghosh and Vijay Kannan, have provided their vision statements, included below. Candidates for the other officer positions have provided their list of activities/services as related to DSI.

PRESIDENT-ELECT

Soumen Ghosh – Georgia Institute of Technology

Vision Statement

I have now been a member of the Decision Science Institute (DSI) for 32 years, right from my days as a doctoral student during the mid-eighties! During all this time,

I've missed attending the DSI annual conference only three times! I've also held several offices in the Institute, from being Track and Session Chair, to being a member as well as Chair of several standing committees (Fellows Committee, Programs and Meetings Committee, Member Services Committee, Publications Committee, Doctoral Student Affairs Committee), and coordinator of several DSI services (Professional Development Program, Doctoral Student Consortium, Doctoral Dissertation Competition). Perhaps most importantly, I've had the opportunity to serve on the DSI Board of Directors for four terms - twice as At-Large Vice President (1998-2000 and 2003-2005), once as Secretary of the Board (2007-2009), and most recently as Vice President of Professional Development (2016-2018), with the last year being on the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors. One of the highest honor bestowed on me as a member of this great Institute was being appointed as a Fellow of DSI in 2011. Given this long history of my relationship with the Institute, I have been the beneficiary of considerable cumulative knowledge and understanding of the inner workings of the Institute, as well as its policies and procedures. It is an absolute honor and privilege to be nominated as a candidate for the position of DSI President-Elect. Given my considerable history of involvement and knowledge about the Institute, I feel quite well qualified, confident, and ready to lead the Institute on its continuing journey for pursuit of excellence.

Vision

The Decision Sciences Institute has been a long-standing and prominent organization for academics and professionals in the decision sciences area. Over the years, the Institute has built a prestigious reputation for the quality of its products and services, such as its annual and regional conferences, faculty and students development activities, placement services, and of course, it's erudite journals of high academic repute. A long line of able Presidents of the Institute have endeavored hard to provide a continued ascent towards excellence and success. However, the Institute also has to operate in a very challenging environment where the competition keeps getting stronger (e.g., INFORMS, POMS, AIS/ICIS, AOM, just to name a few), and hence the pressure to continuously improve is unrelenting. We have to recognize that our members have other choices, and if we are not able to keep improving our products and services, we have the clear and distinct danger of losing our membership to competitor organizations. Thus, we have to keep our strategic vision and priorities aligned to not only meet our competitive challenges, but at the same time to also drive continued growth, enhance global reputation, and keep improving the "delivered value" of our products and services. Therefore, my overall vision for the Decision Sciences Institute is to be the pre-eminent Institute of global repute for scholars and professionals in the multidisciplinary area of decision sciences.

Priorities

To keep improving in the face of challenging competition and strategic threats from competing organizations, we need to consider ways in which we can strengthen the strategic position of the Institute. In addition to leveraging our existing strengths, it also entails focusing on our "multidisciplinary" strength, and even discovering new ways to exploit this strength in order to solidify our competitive advantage. This requires us to make careful strategic moves that can be effective in creating a more positive and high quality image for the Institute, enhancing our responsiveness to changing demands/requirements from our members and their universities, having a diversified portfolio of offerings to create better "delivered value", attracting the top scholars around the world in the broad area of decision sciences to be our most ardent ambassadors, and being proactive in exploiting new opportunities of interest to the Institute. However, we are not going to be able to accomplish these goals unless we embrace a collaborative mindset and work together diligently towards a common agenda for the pursuit for excellence. I see the following priorities and imperatives as being important to achieve the vision and goals I have stated above.

Reputation and Growth Priority. We have to drive continued growth and reputation of DSI by engaging eminent scholars in the affairs of our Institute. This can significantly help to propel our competitive advantage. But we cannot engage them unless we are able to attract them by providing a high “delivered value” of our products and services, and the prestige of membership in the Institute. In addition, managing external perceptions, reputational rankings, and the quality of our journals and publications warrant dedicated efforts from our membership, the editorial team, along with the editorial office of the publisher. Maintaining and further building upon the high reputation of our journals would need to be a key priority for us. This is a particularly critical imperative because several of our closest competitors have already built their reputation based on their flagship journals, for example, INFORMS, POMS, AOM, etc. We need to redouble our efforts in this regard, which will also serve to fuel further growth in the Institute membership.

Delivered Value Priority. The Institute provides value through its product and service offerings delivered to its members. Along with maintaining and further enhancing the reputational value and quality of our products, i.e., our journals and publications, we also need to keep building better value in our service offerings via our conferences, placement services, service to the regions, professional development service, our doctoral students consortium, doctoral dissertation competition, new faculty consortium, professional development workshops, instructional innovation activities, etc. We have a lot going for us, and already provide high value to our members, but we need to strive to keep improving and innovating, and keep creating, building, and delivering better value to our members.

Interdisciplinary Collaboration Priority. In order to leverage and further strengthen the “multi-disciplinary” focus of our Institute, we need to foster collaboration across disciplines, other professional organizations/societies, and universities. This issue gets to the very core of “Decision Sciences” - while there are several professional societies that primarily focus on a single or limited set of disciplines, such as POMS, AIS, AOM, etc., DSI has the unique competitive position of being able to create innovations, customer value, and competitive advantage through “multidisciplinarity”. This can only be enhanced through the creation of meaningful collaborations and team building, which in turn can provide a sound way to strategically differentiate DSI from our key competitors, thus creating significant competitive advantage for the Institute.

Globalization Priority. We live in the era of globalization, whereby the notion of domestic dominance is merely ephemeral. Most organizations today compete in global markets, and need to develop appropriate global strategies in order to drive their global competitiveness. DSI is no exception – we cannot be a great organization simply based on our domestic activities and offerings. We need to embark on a significant globalization drive to dramatically increase our global membership base (which will also drive growth), as well as substantially enhance our global reputation. We do lag behind our key competitors in our global reputation, memberships, and conference attendance (for example, compared to INFORMS, POMS, AOM, AIS, etc.). This is another important imperative to keep building global linkages and significantly increase our global activities, and the membership and involvement of colleagues from around the world.

In summary, based on my vision and goals for DSI mentioned above, my immediate priorities for action would be as follows.

1. Place high strategic emphasis to further enhance the stature, reputation, image, profile, and competitive strength of the Institute in the global arena.
2. Drive continued growth, both domestically and globally, and significantly increase the involvement of global top-tier schools and leading scholars in the affairs of the Institute.

3. Significantly enhance the delivered value of the Institute's products and services, particularly the quality of the conferences, the scholarly reputation of all the journals/publications, and the mentoring of new faculty and doctoral students.
4. Maintain strategic and operational stability in the Institute to continue the pursuit of excellence and competitive success.

Finally, I want to reiterate that I am absolutely privileged, honored, and humbled to be nominated for the position of DSI President-Elect. I pledge my strong commitment to furthering the core values of DSI, and I feel confident that I can provide effective leadership in continuing to lead DSI towards further greatness and success.

Soumen Ghosh is the Nancy and Lawrence Huang Professor of operations and supply chain management, and Associate Dean of Academics for executive education in the Scheller College of Business at Georgia Institute of Technology (Georgia Tech).

PRESIDENT-ELECT

Vijay Kannan – Utah State University

Vision Statement

I am honored and privileged to be a candidate for President-Elect of DSI. For more than 25 years, DSI has been a place where I have formed countless friendships and learned from many colleagues, mentors, and leaders. I have had the good fortune to serve DSI in a number of capacities. These include editorial roles with each of our publications, and serving on DSI and regional Boards and annual meeting program planning teams. I am sensitive to the fact that we serve a diversity of stakeholders and interests, and must continue to do so in an inclusive, collaborative manner.

Over the last eighteen months, I have served on the DSI Board as it has asked important questions about the DSI of the future, established a strategic plan, and committed to governance practices consistent with our status as a non-profit organization. We now have clarity in a path forward. My commitment is to working together with the Board, regional leadership, and our members to achieve a shared vision and build on the foundation that has been laid.

Three principles underlie the strategic plan: strengthening programmatic offerings, increasing engagement of members and other stakeholders, and adding value to members. Operationally, this means

- Continuing to encourage and empower Annual Meeting Program Chairs to innovate, experiment, and learn from other professional organizations, and ensuring that they have the resources and supporting infrastructure to execute effectively.
- Collaborating with regional leadership to create synergy between DSI and regional meetings and using this to strengthen our meeting portfolio and brand.
- Supporting our journal editors in their efforts to continue raising the quality, profile, and visibility of our journals.
- Continuing conversations about strengthening our portfolio of publications to increase the visibility and profile of our existing publications and of the DSI brand.
- Exploring how to make DSI compelling for doctoral students and junior faculty looking to find a professional organization home, and for current and former DSI members for whom our value proposition is not as clear as it might have been in the past.
- Building on recent efforts to increase communication, transparency, and accountability throughout the organization, and further cultivating a culture of engagement in which members are motivated to not only get involved but seek out leadership roles.

Our success will depend on pragmatic, collaborative decision making, well thought out execution, and a single minded focus on who we serve and how. If elected, our strategic plan will be my guide, the Board, leaders throughout the DSI family, and our members will be my sources of input and wisdom. I believe that my leadership record within DSI provides evidence of effective execution in a collaborative, respectful manner, and a deeply held commitment to the organization. Thank you for your consideration.
